Go ahead and laugh with your child about this silly goose that is on the loose. Each set of pages sets up a rhyme that you could ask your child if they know another word that may go along with those words.....play, way, say, day. Since this goose is on his way to the zoo, you could find pictures of these animals in old magazines, cut them out and have your child match them up with the characters in the book.

Each time your child turns the pages of a book or opens the flaps to see what's inside, they are developing their finger coordination. It's actually pretty fun to know that such a simple task is helping your child to grow in physical ways right along with learning to love a book and the adventure they can take by reading it.
